The Lynching at Palmetto, Georgia. Last Thursday night in Palmetto, a little town in Georgia, nine negroes were under arrest, and tied together, charged with arson. One of the negroes had confessed, and implicated the others in the burning of houses. Half dozen white men were guarding them in a room. About one o'clock in the night a number of masked men entered the building, made the negroes stand up, and when the assassins were ready, they fired, and four of the negroes fell, dead, another was fatally wounded; two were less dangerously wound ed; two escaped with a bad scare. The man who confessed to a conspiracy for arson, and was the witness against the others, was

The newspapers are now busy delivering their old stereotyped sermons on lynching. Instead of remarking upon the lack of a performance of duty on the part of the known members of the guard, the newspapers, as far as we have noticed, have attacked the unknown (?) assassins in general terms.

Our own opinion is, that the men who were entrusted with the protection and care of the prisoners are responsible for the murder, and they are scarcely less culpable than the alleged "unknown" men who fired the fatal shots. If it was possible for the guards to be surprised, it is certainly improbable that they were taken unawares. It is certain that no report is made of even a protest against the murder, and it is certain that we have no evidence that they fired a single gun in defense of their helpless prisoners.

A mob is always a coward, and that aggregation of men, who assemble for a lawless purpose may be depended upon to yield to even the show of resistance. Six men, who were faithful totheir trust, should have, and crops and to cultivate them, and to attend to could have, protected their prisoners.

There is not a mob on the face of the earth, that will attack six well armed officers who who are determined to do their duty.

Was there collusion between the guardsmen and the mob who murdered the helpless If there was collusion, we are incompetent to properly characterize the act. If there was not collusion, and the guards, from fear to do their duty, allowed their prisoners to be murdered in cold blood, without the firing of a gun in their defense, our knowledge of the words of the English language is inadequate to describe their conduct. As long as the statutes of the country excuse the officers of the law for surrendering their prisoners to be murdered, and as long as public contempt is withheld from such unfaithful officers, we may expect to hear of lynchings and assassinations.

"The guards were overpowered" is a stereotyped expression, and it is a statement which is absolutely false. The guards may surrender their prisoners to be murdered, but no guard of six men were ever overpowered by

A mob being essentially timid, it is not in

The Governor of Georgia, perhaps in imitation of the editorial writers, proceeds to offer $500 reward for the capture, with proof to convict, the participators in the Palmetto assassination. With the newspapers denouncing the murderous act, and with the Governor's proclamation, offering a reward, the public may think that the sin of the terrible crime that has just been committed has been effaced.

The names of the guard could no doubt be found out, and if there was a law making occuntable for their failure to protect their prisoners, we would have fewer occa sions for hysterics over the deed of mobs.

If the guards had fired on the mob who had come to shoot down their prisoners, who were tied together by a big rope, the mob would have retired. A mob always runs, if it is fired upon. But a mob seldom or never makes an attack where there is danger of being fired upon.

Let Governor Candler find some law by which he can punish men for surrendering their prisoners to be murdered and we will hear no more of guards being "overpowered." The guards at Palmetto should be held ac countable as accessory to the murder of the men whom it was their duty to protect.

No matter how many there may be in the mob, whether five or fifteen, reports generally set their number down to exactly one hundred. If proper effort is made by the Governor of Georgia, he canfind out the number engaged in the Palmetto murder, and he can learn their names. There were too many engaged in it. In every conspiracy there is always one with less principle than he can learn their names. There were too many engaged in it. In every conspiracy there is always one with less principle than the rest, and, he generally volunteers to give the whole thing away, if there is any demand for the facts, or if he can do an injury to his fellow-conspirator.

Don't Put Politics In It.

Charleston is making great preparations for the Confederate Vetrans Reunion in that good old city. A proposition has been made to invite W. J. Bryan to make a speech on that occasion, to which, of course, objections has been made. We have no advice to give our Charleston friends, but we think the pleasure of the occasion would be marred by the presence of Mr. Bryan or any candidate for President. The agitation of the free silver coinage question at that time would be a mistake. The presentation of the free silver coinage question at that time would be unwise and impolite.

Broad Tires

Our friend, the Yorkville Enquirer, urges the use of wide tires on vehicles of all kinds, station. and favors a State law looking to the enforce ment of the use of broad tires. If our respect ed contemporary would urge the dealers in wagons to lay in a stock of wide tired wagons the people would buy them. Our dealers bought a few of the wider tires, and they sell readily. The usual width of the tire of a two horse wagon has been an inch-and-a-half, but two inch tires are not a rare thing now, tires two and-a-half inches are to seen. Our own opinions is that the wide tires wil be the tires of the future in this section. Wide tires and lower wheels will serve the eople better than the old wheels.

If dealers would properly present the wide tire wagons their sale would be common They appeal to the approval of our common

Editor Press and Banner:
Several articles in late issues of your paper seeking light as to the management of the water works require answering. In answer to questions from the gentleman who is a "buyer of the water which is presumably taken from the depths of the deep well." will say that we commenced the use of the well water about November 1st, 1897, and from that time until about October 1st, 1898, no branch water was used. About that date we were unfortunate enough to drop the plunger in the well and turned in the water from the branch which we used for one month until we could clear the well, and at intervals from Nov. 1st, to Dec. 20th, we turned the branch water in several times as the sand from the branch had cut the brass liners of the large pump and we bad considerable trouble and delays in getting things in good running order, but since Dec. 20th no branch water has been used.

Cool Water in Summer Time.

One objection to drinking water from pipes in Summer is that it becomes too warm. Ice is rather expensive and the difficulty can be remedied by putting colis in your well. Hot water can be had in the winter by connecting a coli to your cooking stove but we want a way to have cool water in the Summer and I have found the way. One or two hundred feet of 3-4 pipe can be easily put in your well will be of the same temperature that your well will be of the same temperature that your well will be and of course the water circulating through these pipes will be as cool as your well water. The pipes can be so arranged as not to intefere with drawing. The iron pipes coil will not effect the well water any more than the pipes used in a regular well pump. Then again you will have better drinking water in Winter. It will not be so cold, as the pipes in the well will give you water at the same teperature that your well water is.

Is our artesian water unhealthy? I think you water at the same teperature that your well water is.

Is our artesian water unhealthy? I think not. I have closed up my well entirely and have used no other water but the artesian water for eighteen months, and have neither seen, nor experienced any bad results from it. There will be more fever come from drainage of our waste water than will ever come from drinking our artesian water.

Galvinized pipe will afford better drinking water than the black from pipe. The from water than the black iron pipe. The iron pipe corrodes on the inside and makes the water taste too much of iron, especially, in Summer.

The Black Diamond.

The Black Diamond.

Interest in the Black Diamond is being reviewed. If there is anything in this much talked of road our people should make some effort to brink it by the city of Abbeville. It is a great enterprise and one that will do more for the material upbuilding of the western portion of South Carolina, than any projected in recent years.

However, it is a matter of sufficient importance to merit an investigation, as it will make Port Royal the shipping point of a vast volume of commerce that will be brought from the Mississippi Valley. The road will doubtless be built at no distant day and that it will prove a success no one can doubt. The commerce of the United States is being expanded and the South American states offer great opportunities to our American manufactures. In the building up of this trade the South will get its share and of course South Carolina will come in for her portion. The first requisite is a deep water port and that can be obtained at Port Royal. The road through this portion of South Carolina will pass a rapidly developing cotton manufacturing section, and our mills will find quick transportation of their products to the republic South of us. And with the completion of the Nicaragoa Canal our manufacturiers will be much nearer China and other eastern Asiatic countries than our Northern and New England competitions.

By all means let the road be built it will be towns and cities through which it passes.

A closer commercial relation with Chicago, Cincinnati and other large Western cities will prove mutually beneficial.

We are assured that if the road is built it will come by Abbeville. will come by Abbeville.

A little money goes a long way when good taste and judgment are used. My store stands at all times ready to exemplify this fact.
